CAKEWALK FOR WEDDING MARCH

Tells How Victorious Couple Are Married and All Cakewalk in Church.

A GAIN the San Francisco Examiner, the yellowest of all yellow journals, has reached out its hand and taken in the Islands. Nearly every country of the world has figured in its columns, and the people represented have found themselves decked out in yellow clothing and besmirched with yellow paint, but thus far the Hawaiian Islands had escaped.

The natives of Hilo had better stick to their favorite hula, and not digress from the old steps and genuflections, for if they do the Examiner correspondent will interpret the new steps into a cakewalk and have them doing all sorts of funny things.

The latest thing that the residents of Hilo have been guilty of according to the last Sunday Examiner to reach this City, is a "cakewalk" wedding.

"A cakewalk contest where cupid made the cake and Hymen was the judge," says the Examiner, "is the newest reduction of the Hawaiian Islands." Continuing, the yellow journal goes on:

"A cakewalk contest where cupid made the cake and Hymen was the judge is the newest production of the Hawaiian Islands. Of all the ingenious ways of entering the uncertain portals of matrimony that have been exploited by mate-loving man, surely none can be compared with the cakewalk wedding which recently united two natives of Hilo, Hawaii. The traditional solemnity of such occasions was blithely put aside and bride and groom cakewalked out of single blessedness into marriage."

The events which brought about this uncommon wedding ceremony are of as much interest as the celebration itself. The natives of Hilo, Hawaii, were living in their prosaic, easy-going way, seeking amusement in their traditional hula hula when inclination moved them. One evening the spirit of progress invaded the town in the form of a professional entertainer, his show consisting mainly in the performance of the cakewalk in all its sinuous evolutions.

These ragtime contortions were something entirely new to the Kanaka audience, but they seemed to take it with the same avidity that they take to their poi. At the conclusion of the show, when the entertainer announced his intention of remaining in the town, he instructed those who desired in the intricacies of the cakewalk, he received a tremendous burst of applause.

His classes were too large to manage. Everybody desired to become familiar with the new gaudy dance. The hula hula was neglected and almost discarded. But the skill at their native dance made the natives apt pupils at keeping fancy step to ragtime.

The cakewalk ran riot. There was no quarantining it. Even the old Chinese would unbend and take a turn at this new dance that everybody was trying. People would be seen on the principal streets with heads tilted back, ably doing some new step while friends played a musical instrument. Entering a store to make a purchase, a person would see the dapper clerk come up to him with a swagback glide to ask his wants.

But the seaboard seemed to be the Mecca for cakewalk devotees. There in the sand, with light bathing suits for costumes, the natives would travel rapturously up and down in this exotic dance. There would be seen: The dancing pair that simply sought renown.

By holding out to tire each other down. Where there was so universal an indulgence in this newly introduced pastime, it was natural that rivalry should spring up among certain factions. To decide the much-mooted question of superiority the gentleman who was responsible for this dancing mania made arrangements for a genuine cakewalk.

About fifty couples participated in this great try-out and on account of the general excellence it was especially difficult to award the prize.

The decision was finally given in favor of Maura, a young native business man, and Melahoa Akana, one of the acknowledged belles in swaggar Kanaka society. In grace of execution, in vim and dexterity displayed, in cleverness of new turns performed, this tawny couple earned their laurels.

They had joined hands in this triumphal contest. Why not join hands and hearts in life's battle? Maura found the winning of his Kanaka sweetheart an easy task.

But now for the marriage ceremony. With the memory of their victory fresh in their minds, the idea of a cakewalk occurred to them. They had shown the town that they were the champions in this mode of dancing. Now, why not enter wedlock by the cakewalk route? There were difficulties in the way. The securing of a preacher who would consent to this strange, new ritual was a hard task. A good many shook their heads in emphatic negation, deeming the whole course very sacrilegious. At length a divine was secured who had no objections, and indeed, who had a secret fondness for the cakewalk himself.

When the wedding guests had congregated in the church a sight met their eyes which was without question the queerest ever seen in a religious edifice. The bridal party entered. No fond father was to be seen leading his trembling daughter to the waiting room at the altar. But down the long, broad aisle came the lithe and graceful bride and groom, executing the cakewalk with consummate ease. It being a somewhat difficult task to accommodate ragtime to Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," the organist played "A Georgia Camp Meeting," a far more appropriate piece.

Following closely behind the smiling, dancing couple came the four bridesmaids, elegantly gowned, ably doing the cakewalk with four gentlemen.

When the minister appeared the audience was surprised to detect in his tread a faint suspicion of the ragtime.

When the procession arrived at the altar a scene was enacted in keeping with the started in show the guests that they were indeed without their peers in the realm of cakewalking. Back and forth in front of the altar they went, doing every conceivable evolution. More fun, right before the eyes of the onlookers, but the happy couple kept perfect time. The audience became imbued with the spirit of the affair, keeping in unison by the swaying of heads, the tappings of the feet and the waving of fans. Ruddy and joyful, the all but exhausted couple stopped their dance and took a reverential position before the minister. They had some difficulty in answering the usual questions, not from fright, but from sheer loss of breath due to the violence of their dancing.

The knot was tied without any additional ragtime flourishes, and now Hilo is waiting for the next cakewalk wedding.

IN POLICE COURT.

Many Drunkards Take the Wilcox
Cure and More Are To Appear.

Can it be that the weather is driving folks to drink? The District Court charge sheets these days say as much.

Ten drunkards were given the Wilcox treatment yesterday and almost as many will line up this morning. The town seemed full of staggering incapables yesterday; they rolled in front of the saloons and laid themselves down to rest in any out-of-the-way nook or corner that came handy. It was almost impossible to traverse a hundred yards of city thoroughfare without running across one or more of the much-be-ginned brotherhood. And every mother's son of them blamed it on the weather.

The following cases were disposed of before Judge Wilcox yesterday:

Ah Po, vagrancy, nolle prosequi; ten drunks, $2 and costs; Ah Hoy, violating carriage regulations, reprimanded and discharged; Holoaka, cruelty to animals, bail forfeited.

C. Wong On will this morning answer to a charge of assault with a deadly weapon, to-wit: scissors on Hong Shue.

The disputants are tailors and as business was slack at their establishment, Wong On started to exercise his shears on Hong Shue's anatomy with the result that a tasteful pattern one inch deep was cut in the latter's leg.

It was during the natural history hour. "Give me," asked the teacher, "an example of the alleged deceitful character of the cat." "In restaurants it is sometimes said to pass itself off for a rabbit," answered the head boy. —Philadelphia Times.
